COMMUNICATION SCIENCES AND DISORDERS

“The preparation at Longwood has been unbelievable. Our professors really know us and our backgrounds and aspirations. They’re so well-connected in their field, and the result is great externship placements and amazing career opportunities.”

– Christian Vaughan

graduate student in Communication Sciences and Disorders

Integrate academic knowledge, ethical principles and clinical experiences to prepare for a career in speech-language pathology. Graduates work in a variety of settings, including the university clinic, public or private schools, hospitals, community clinics, nursing homes, infant intervention programs and private practice.

The program is accredited by the Council on Academic Accreditation in Audiology (CAA) and Speech Language Pathology of the American Speech-Language-Hearing Association (ASHA).

The Longwood University Difference

- Small faculty to student ratio, supportive faculty and individual assistance help students succeed.
- Students gain experience in both educational and medical settings, 100 percent of graduates are employed and more than 90 percent pass the Praxis in speech-language pathology on the first attempt.
- The Longwood Center for Communication, Literacy, and Learning has state-of-the-art digital recording equipment, six observable therapy rooms and a preschool literacy room.

Course work and clinical experiences are designed to provide students with a scholarly foundation and expertise in the following areas:

- Articulation-phonology
- Infant and child language disorders
- Voice disorders
- Craniofacial anomalies
- Motor speech disorders
- Stuttering
- Aural rehabilitation
- Dysphagia and aphasia
- Aphasia and right hemisphere disorders
- Ethics and professional studies
- Augmentative and alternative communication
